Vitamin C

Vitamin C, also known as ascorbic acid, is a water-soluble, heat- and light- sensitive vitamin that plays an important role in metabolic functions that are critical for the human body. Vitamin C is known in cosmetics for its powerful antioxidant power against free radicals that cause early skin aging.

Calendula Officinalis

Calendula (Calendula officinalis) flowers contain triterpene glycosides and aglycones, carotenoids, and essential oils. The petals of C. officinalis exhibit a wide range of biological activities, including antioxidant, antitumor, antibacterial, and anti-inflammatory activities.

Due to its gentle texture, it is well tolerated by most skin types, including sensitive skin. It is also non-comedogenic, making it safe for use.

Camellia Sinensis

Camellia sinensis leaf extract is a rich extract containing bioactive compounds such as catechins, L-theanine, and caffeine from the leaves of the tea plant. It contains antioxidant, photoprotective, anti-cellulite, slimming, skin, hair, and microcirculation properties, which create a wide range of uses.
